“My daughter left her kindergarten school year a little behind in reading, I was trying to make the best decision I could as a parent when selecting between brick and mortar vs. remote. I have the opportunity to be home with her daily, so I chose the remote learning option mainly for consistency. Knowing how important it was for her to catch up with her reading and the need for her to make big strides this year in first grade, I was worried changing her learning environment unexpectedly may set her back and that was the last thing we needed going into this new year. Here we are in mid October and I couldn't have imagined how great this experience has ended up being for us. While there have been some internet issues/ user interface struggles along the way, the way you have handled it has been truly amazing! Every day you give these children 110% and it is much more than I could've ever expected from someone walking into this situation at the last minute. Yet you showed up with a smile on your face and ready to teach our kids just as if they were there in the classroom with you. My daughter enjoys reading books here at home so much now and the fact that she is learning computer skills is just an added bonus. Everyone who asks if we will be going back in the spring or not, I tell them how happy we are with our teacher that we don't want to risk losing you and most likely will stay in remote, so that she can continue being taught by you through the end of her first grade year. Thank you for making this experience more positive than I could've imagined it would be!”

This is from a grandparent of two of my students. (Grandma Rocks!)

It's been amazing for my two grand daughters, but 100% of that is their instructor. I come into this in a panic mode. I knew I didn't have the education to teach a fifth grader it's been soooo many years since I've been in school (1982). So yes my children have been successful in remote learning, with the direction from their teacher.

From me to you. Thank you so much for your patience and love of teaching.
